

Circus Harmony returns home after being stuck in Israel

Early Tuesday morning, a dozen St. Louisans, stuck in the middle of an international conflict, got the chance to finally come home.

John Henry, 2:59 p.m. CDT July 29, 2014

ST. LOUIS- Early Tuesday morning, a dozen St. Louisans, stuck in the middle of an international conflict, got the chance to finally come home.

The teenage acrobatics group "Circus Harmony" was supposed to return from Israel last week. But, they ended up staying another week in the Middle Eastern country when the FAA temporarily suspended all air travel between Israel and the United States.

Previous Story: Circus Harmony Members Stuck in Israel

The group's flight got in around 9:30 a.m. Loved ones stood at the Lambert St. Louis-International Airport security gates for close to an hour to see their friends and family.

More Information: Circus Harmony Blog

Circus Harmony member Nick Dotson told NewsChannel 5 it was great to reconnect with his family after being away.

"It was unbelievable, I've never been away from my mom and dad this long," he said.

But, members said they enjoyed the extra week they spent away. They said they got the chance to learn even more about Israel.